Residual method. Heuristic value of methods for establishing causal relationships.

Application of Bacon-Mill methods in jurisprudence.

Forms of knowledge development: problem, hypothesis, forensic version, theory.

Topic 4.1. Concept as a form of thought

Language forms of expression of concepts. Terms and concepts. Concepts and names. The role of concepts in cognition.

The logical characteristic of the concept. The content of the concept. Signs, types of signs: simple and complex, positive and negative, generic and specific. Predicates as a logical form of expressing the content of a concept.

The scope of the concept. Classes (sets) and subclasses (subsets). Class elements. The relation of membership of an element to a class and the inclusion of a class in a class. Operations with classes: intersection, addition, union, subtraction. Connection between operations on contents and volumes of concepts. The law of the inverse relationship between the volumes and contents of concepts. Logical and actual scope of concepts. Logical and actual content of concepts. Universality of the law of inverse relation.

Types of concepts. Logically empty and actually empty concepts. Logically non-empty and actually non-empty concepts. Singular and general concepts. Concepts with universal scope. Concrete and abstract concepts. Positive and negative concepts. Irrelevant, relative and correlative concepts. Collective and non-collective concepts. Classification, comparative and quantitative concepts and their role in science. Logical problems of measurements.

Relations between concepts. Comparable and incomparable concepts. Types of comparable concepts: compatible and incompatible concepts. Types of compatibility: equivalence, partial coincidence (intersection), subordination. Types of incompatibility: subordination, contradiction, opposite. Euler circles and Venn diagrams as a means of analyzing relationships between concepts.

Specificity of legal concepts.

Topic 4.2. Basic cognitive operations with concepts: generalization, limitation and division of concepts.

Limits of generalization and limitations of concepts. Basic logical methods of generalization and limitation of concepts. Division of concepts. Division structure: divisible concept, division base, division members. Types of division: taxonomic and mereological. Types of taxonomic division: dichotomous and according to the modification of the trait. Division rules: non-emptiness of division members, non-intersection of volumes of division members, one basis for division, sequence of division, equality of the volume of the divisible concept and the totality of volumes of division members, absence of division members with an empty volume. Possible division errors: incompleteness of division, mixing of bases of division, inconsistent division, crossing division.

Classification. Natural and artificial classification. The value of division and classification in science and practice.

4. Theory of concepts and definitions

Topic 4.3. Definition. Ostensive and verbal definitions. Techniques similar to the definition: description, comparison, clarification characterization, through example. The problem of definability. The main types of definitions in form: explicit and implicit. The structure of explicit definitions: definiendum and definiens. Types of explicit definitions: generic (qualifying, genetic, target and operational) and non-generic (propositional definitions). Implicit definitions: contextual, through abstraction, inductive, axiomatic, recursive. Nominal and real definitions, Rules of definitions, mistakes in definitions. The value of definitions in legal science and rule-making. Methodological requirements for the definition. Proof and conviction. Typology of beliefs. The structure of the evidence: thesis, arguments, demonstration. evidence: direct and indirect. The concepts of refutation and criticism. Refutation of the thesis. Criticism and refutation of arguments. Critical analysis of the demonstration. Errors in proof and refutation. The loss of the thesis, the substitution of the thesis, the anticipation of the foundation, the circle in the proof. Dispute. Participants of the dispute: proponent and opponent. Types of dispute: dispute to establish the truth, dispute to convince, dispute to win. Types of tricks in a dispute: acceptable and unacceptable tricks. 5. Logical-epistemological Valid tricks: hiding the thesis, delaying the objection, analysis of argumentation conditionally accepting the opponent's arguments. Tricks of a logical nature: sophisms. Tricks of a sociopsychological nature: "bait", "belittling the opponent", "selfpraise", "insight", an argument for common sense, an argument for profit, an argument for fidelity, proving the opponent's thoughts, labeling, feigning misunderstanding, imaginary inattention, choice terminology, demagogy, meaningful understatement. Tricks of an organizational and procedural nature: the order of posing questions, their postponement and imposition. Neutralization and exposure of tricks. Strategy and tactics of the dispute. Main and reserve arguments.
