1. COURSE GOAL

The aim of the course is to acquaint students within the framework of the course with the features of international law as an independent system of law, which plays an increasing role in the regulation of international relations. The course is based on the main sources of international law, primarily general and special international treaties, as well as international legal customs, which continue to play an important role in regulating international legal relations along with treaty provisions. Special attention is paid to the decisions of bodies of international intergovernmental organizations, international judicial decisions and doctrine, which reflect the main trends in the progressive development of international law.

The main objectives of the course include the following: to reveal the essence, features and legal nature of international law as an independent system of law; to prove its non-alternative role in solving global problems; to analyze the content of the branches and institutions of international law that make up a special part of the course; to highlight the main trends in the process of progressive development of international law; to point out the obstacles of a conceptual, political, geopolitical and normative nature that make it difficult to apply international law as an effective means of resolving interstate disputes and overcoming emerging crises in various spheres of international relations.
